

How connections between the city
and waterfront could be shaped.

WGTVN 2040
Reshaping Wellington's future

Absolutely
POSITIVELY
ME HEKE KI PŌNEKE
WELLINGTON CITY COUNCIL Wellington

A MORE CONNECTED WATERFRONT

Wellington's waterfront is continually rated by Wellington's residents as one of the city's greatest features. For the waterfront to succeed, however, it needs to be used by large numbers of people both during the week as well as at the weekends. For this to happen, there needs to be easy to find, intuitive and frequent links between the city and the waterfront.

This project involves creating better connections from the city to the waterfront. One way to achieve this is to relate the different areas within the waterfront with different functions in order to better connect these parts with their adjacent streets. For example, Te Papa and its surrounding area is developing into a cultural quarter. The role and identity for this area could be made clearer. Likewise, the central waterfront and Pipitea areas have the potential to be more clearly defined and their links to the city made more explicit. Jervis Quay acts as a barrier to the waterfront. Much like the boulevard streets in Te Aro, Jervis Quay is more corridor than a space for people. Revitalising this street to make it more walkable will improve its links to the waterfront.

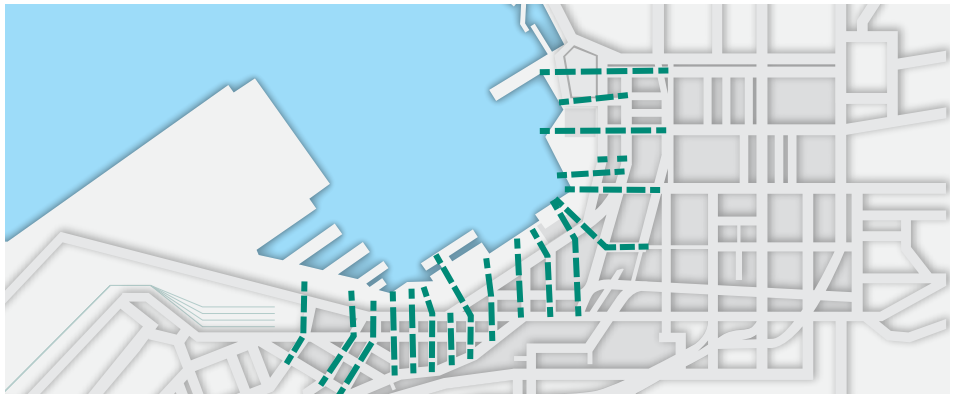

Find out more about our central city framework at wellington2040.co.nz

PRESENT DAY

TOWARDS WELLINGTON 2040

PROJECT LOCATIONS